He used three small parkages and derived on much retiref, that be purchased twelve more, whith entirely cured his cough, and soon gave him strength to attend his tarm. I am convinced that although the medicine is in a pick-and form, it is powerful in its operation, and no cought Mr. Maawell is induled to this, with the sid of a small dose of purgative medicine, occasionally, for the good health the now enjoys.

But I must tell you of a still greater cure in my norm house. My brother John Flatey Bernard, was no far gone with what was pronounced by several physicians to be communition of the lungs that ill agreed he must die. With a hope of affording temporary relief, we resolved to give him the middest medicines we could find. I gave him at little Rabam of life, with sugar, and ecasionally a small dose of purgative medicine; at the same time allowing him to give him the most discressing Cough, and although he had been spitting blood and discharging offensive matter from live imags, with every other indication of the soon approach of death, he is now quite well enough to attend to his business. My neithbora are all well and the stomach of the country of the total part of the doubt this testimony, [which you are at likety to publish,] may have it from my sen lips, by caping the office.
